"JOHN BULL" DIES.
LONDON, Nov. 8.—The death of Sir Oswald Mosley, Bt., removed a picturesque survival of old England, for he not only looked but actually dressed the cartoonist's part of John Bull, while his mind was correspondingly.

Sir Oswald was descended from an ancient Staffordshire family, noted for its stubbornness in litigation but of the highest probity. In his youth he was a notable boxer. He went through Rome, then settled down as a country gentleman. He was a familiar figure at the Christmas parties given in London, where he was to be seen escorting parties of farmers among the pines, prodding the pigs with his cane and kicking his hands into the sheep's wool. To lighten his resemblance to John Bull, which he enjoyed, he wore a broadcloth white hat, a coat with a half dozen buttons and a flowered waistcoat. His usual costume with his stout, starchy figure and florid complexion made him the center of the looks of everyone.
